ous arithmetic problems involving numbers up to fifteen. The clever little tumbling fox terriers pleased with their somersaults. The grand wind-up was a kicking and bucking mule which refused to permit anyone to ride her. One young man—evidently a member of the company—took a chance, and after many laughable attempts stuck on the mule's back, much to the delight of the audience.

Selvester, "the talkative trixter," opened the snow with a good line of tricks and talk. Because many of his tricks are old he falled to get the audience with him at first, but his clever and uninterrupted flow of conversation finally set them aliaughing, and when he worked several new tricks at the finish he received hearty appliause.

Many scenario writers and critics waited patiently to see what fault they could find with the film dramatization of "Paid in Full." which will open at the American theater today, and which was written by Louis Reeves Harrison, eminent critic of motion picture plays of the Moving Picture World. Mr. Harrison has never been backward in condemning scenarios. So naturally many of his contemporaries waited their chaince to "get back" at him. But when Mr. Harrison's completed scenario was given its first presentation scores of critics, motion picture playwights and producers were present, but were unable to find any longed for faults. ## Scene From Eugene Walter's "Paid in Full"

Tully Marshall and Caroline French in "Paid in Pull."

The beauty of the film presentation of Eugene Walter's five-season theatrical seasation, "Paid in Full," is that everything is seen and nothing left to the imagination. Louis Reeves Harrison, one of the severest critics of motion picture plays on the staff of the Moving Picture World, in writing the seenario, succeeded in making a great many of the seenes as interesting and as big with vital incidents as are the duplicate seenes of the original four acts of the play.

The screen version of "Paid in Full," which will be seen at the American theater for three days, commencing today, works on the interest and increases the attention so steadily that the audience is fairly held in a spell before the end of part three. In the scores of scenes for the "movies" in this production. The beauty of the film presentation, which were left to the imagination of Earton and Lovera have an act that is different. The young woman is clearly, whether in Mexican, Scottish or Salome dances, and her partner takes off each of her dances in a comical style that is his own. Joe Whitehead, billed as "a merry wag with a bunch of squirrel food," certainly excels in the part of the "mit," and the best part of his act is that he seems to enjoy the work as much as does the crowd. He sings, dances and gives various industries and the sudience showed that it likes even on the stage and then cheered him baid. Worthy or special mention this week is the opening selection played by the orner show is much better than that of law to the first party. She was one of the founders and the audience showed that it likes even orchestra musle when well played by applauding—something out of the ordinary for a vaudeville theater. Some new faces are seen in the comedy motion picture, but the film is just as funny as ever. The entire show is much better than that of last week and well worth seeing.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

Margaret Illington, who returns to the Salt Lake Theater tonight in "Within the Law."

The much discussed and widely heralded sensational episode in Bayard Veiller's new American play, "Within the Law," the supreme dramatic triumph of the year in New York and London, in which Margaret Illington is to appear at the Salt Lake theater tonight, tomorrow night and special Tuesday matinee, takes place in the thrilling "third degree" scene in the last act. In this act, which is a succession of startling surprises, there is an exact reproduction of the famous detective bureau at police headquarters in New York City during an official investigation of a mysterious murder. There are the officials, the lawyers, the suspects, The much discussed and widely her

Mary Pickford at the Rex

After years of solitude, Nina, the little castaway, fears man.

With natural backgrounds so unusually good as to evoke marked attention, and with Mary Pickford, the celebrated film favorite, and the Famous players, the Frohman production of "Hearts Adrift," opening at the Rex today, promises to bring that house capacity business again. Mary Pickford's name alone is sufficient to commend a production to motion picture patrons, and when a drama like "Hearts Adrift" is added, the combination is one that can-
